country, have led many persons to believe that his hanging was unjustifiable. We were induced to look into the matter, and have been rewarded by ascertaining to our satisfaction that Dr. Lamson richly deserved the fate he met. The fact that the would-be assassin of Queen Victorial was so promptly acquitted upon the plea of insanity is convincing proof that the same plea would have been effectual in Dr. Lamson plea would have been effectual in Dr. Lamson richly described by the Constitutional of Dr. Lamson richly described by the Constitution of Delaware; Mr. John E. There could be no inquest, for Lamson was the boy's physician and could write any certificate he liked about the disease and death. However, it would have attracted attention if another brother had died in the same house. It was at first proposed to exhume the body of the other brother, but this was not done for (I believe) two reasons—first, because in the lapse of time traces of the vegetable poison to which Lamson was so attached could hardly have been traced; and secondly, because the evidence in the second brother's case was too conclusive to require confirmation. But it is pretty generally believed that it in Dr. Lamson's own house in the Isle of Wight. The northern people, as Mr. Tucker said in the same office for the term next succeeding that for which he may be elected, which is equivalent to saying that the election of a man once to the office of mayor shall disqualify him from being elected to the office of mayor shall dispared in the balance of power. We do not censure our northern brethren for this reason. There is no excuse for putting negroes over white men. They are not fit to make have for the superior race. Therefore, we cannot but be surprised that Mr. Calkins should permit prejudices engendered by the war between the States to dominate his judgment and his feelings as a white man.

will doubt any statement which he makes. He has written from London to the Cincinnati Commercial a letter containing particulars enough in the case to satisfy all inquirers. After saying that when Lawson's crime was first published there was general incredulity m London, and a universal hope that the dark facts could be explained away, he adds that all London would have felt relief "if Lawson's could have raised one doubt of his guilt in any unbiassed mind." Twice was the trial postponed at Lawson's request, simply because the facts were apparently so conclusive that the community was anxious not to have any item omitted that could tell in his favor. He had the ablest counsel, and yet his counsel never once suggested or intimated that he was insane or even a monomaniac, though he was afterwards said to have had a fanatical belief in the efficacy of aconite. We now quote Mr. Conway:

"The quantity administered to and sereted about Lauson's victim was enough to kill a dozen men. Now, it so happens that the only known victim of this aconite for a large of our county court.
